

Because of its pure and wholesome ingredients, Father John's Medicine so strengthens the system that it is able to ward off attacks of disease; prevents pneumonia and consumption; cures colds and all throat and lung troubles without the use of alcohol or dangerous drugs. Not a patent medicine.

MEN OF ST. CHARLES' PARISH PLAN EVENT

Whist, Pinocle and "45" Party Followed by Dancing.

The Men's league of St. Charles' parish is making great preparations for a parish entertainment, Tuesday evening, Feb. 2, in St. Charles' hall. The event will consist of a big whist party, an old fashioned "45" game and pinocle. Dancing will follow at the end of the card party. For the whist accommodations will be made for seating 800 players and fifty beautiful prizes will be awarded to the winners. For the "45" game and pinocle, the lower hall will be reserved and 30 chickens have been contributed as awards. The men of St. Charles' parish are intensely interested in the financial success of this parish event and it is destined to call forth as large a crowd as any event held hitherto under the auspices of the league. Excellent trolley service will be on hand for patrons, at the close of the event.

GIRL OUTRAGED AND KILLED

Third Mysterious Crime at Dayton, Ohio, in as Many Years.

Dayton, Ohio, Jan. 25.—All Dayton is stirred over the city's third murder mystery in as many years. Fifteen-year-old Mary Forschner is the last victim of a mysterious ravisher. Charles Snyder, who was arrested on suspicion, stoutly denies his guilt. He could not explain the motive of his crime. The explanation of his whereabouts at the hour the killing took place was arrested. Mary Forschner's body, the face and neck lacerated, was found by the girl's stepfather, Robert Geppert, who alarmed at the girl's absence from home went in search of her. The body had been dragged from the roadside into a cornfield then across another road and finally deposited in a wagon shed in the rear of a barn. Samuel Morris has also been held as a witness. The autopsy showed that the girl had been ravished.

Mary Forschner worked in Kling's tobacco warehouse. She was mature for her age, unusually pretty and popular among her young friends. Her mother said that she had no beaux.

POINTS OF INTEREST.

Remember that your credit is good with the Boston Household Supply Co. for everything needed to furnish the home.

At Library Corner a special sale of suit cases is an event of importance now. In addition to our strong money saving offers in high grade suits and overcoats. Note how prices have been clipped on good suit cases. John F. Keane & Co., Main and John Sts.

An Accurate Timepiece. A good, well regulated watch is a necessity for a man or woman engaged in business of any kind. An unreliable watch, or no watch at all results in tardiness and consequent annoyance. Henry C. Reid's watches in all the leading makes are shown in gold, gold filled, and in silver at the lowest prices. Henry C. Reid, 952 Main street, near Bank street, a step down from the sidewalk.

Many People are taking advantage of the shoe bargains being offered in Thing & Co.'s unloading sale. Thousands of pairs of first class shoes have been brought to the surface by the recent inventory, and sharp reductions have been made; former selling prices receive very little consideration now. Every effort has been made to make it worth the while of every person to attend this sale of remarkable savings. Shoes for men, women and children at prices that will astonish you. Come in and look around the store and see the scores of bargains prominently displayed on tables, with the prices plainly marked. Every pair of shoes offered are bright, clean and new. The strong, that surged through our store since this sale started have spread the news of the marvelous savings broadcast. Thrifty people have heeded, are heeding, and buying. Are you among them? Better be! S. B. Thing & Co., 1153 Main street.

The Best of All Value Giving will continue at Gottlieb & Gorman Co. all this week. The last three days of first class shoes have been brought to the public of the city have been known. Great reductions in all kinds of apparel for women and children have brought huge crowds to this store, but the stock is so immense that the brisk buying of last week made but a faint impression, and patrons this week will find a wide range of choice as well as the most remarkable bargains. It is impossible to tell a story of the great value giving—there's but one way to tell it, and that way is to visit to this greatest of sales. Go today and you'll be glad you did as long as you live. The Gottlieb & Gorman Co. store is just opposite Howland's, and the center of the greatest interest to all women bargain seekers this week. The big stock must go—prices are no object.

Shoe Sale. At Molhan's beginning Tuesday, Jan. 26, will be a sale of shoes for men, women and children. No improbable statements are made, and no disappointments await patrons. Odd lots and sizes will be sold at special prices to clear the lines. Shoes whose sizes are in the lot, real bargains are to be had. Prices are cut regardless of value. Among the special values are children's and misses' light and dark tan, this season's style, button and Blucher. Children's shoes in gun metal calf and other leathers, and shoes for girls wearing ladies' styles in gun metal and kid. Women's new style plain toe gun metal, button, and Blucher, and gun metal narrow toe with tip. High cuts for women in dark tan vici kid, button and blucher and patent kid lace boots with plait toe. For men great reductions will be made in certain lines of the Burt & Packard "Korrek Shape" shoes in Guaranteed Patent Burday and in dull finish leather, in the finest quality, and in medium grades. Additional bargains not specified, are to be had at Molhan's sale, beginning Tuesday, Jan. 26.

Nothnagle's Bargain's. Very special for this week is a lot of beautiful odd dressers and chiffonieres in oak and mahogany at about one third off regular prices. A few fine three-piece parlor suits are offered at half and some at one-third off. A few nice Mission buffets at half price, a few golden oak buffets and sideboard at half price and two thirds off. Baby carriages and go carts at one-third off and a good assortment of fine Rugs still left at the unheard of prices advertised last week. These are truly remarkable bargains that no one can afford to miss and Glenwood's ranges are going at a lively pace all the time. The enormous sale of these famous ranges fully demonstrates their great popularity. Don't pay for a fine range fussing with a worn out old range. A new Glenwood will save its price in five years in the coal it will save for you by that time, so it really costs you nothing, and think of the annoyance and worry it saves the cook to say nothing about the things you waste which a poor working stove would for you. Just make up your mind to see the latest Glenwoods at Nothnagle's.

A Rising Fall. A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."

"Well, what was it?"

"Well, most of them merely exclaimed, 'At last!'"

There was a pause, and then she asked:

"Well, what did some of the others say?"

"One of them said, 'Who'd have thought it?'" Another, "Will wonders never cease?" And a third—

"Oh, never mind the rest," interrupted the fiancée. "I never did have much curiosity."

Was He Delirious? "Almost every man," says a Baltimore specialist, "learns sooner or later to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" asked a physician, a fellow graduate of mine, of a patient's brother.

"Oh, he's much worse," came from the other in a tone of dejection. "He's been delirious for several hours. At 3 o'clock he said, 'What an old woman that doctor of mine is!'" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

"Lip-pincott's."

A certain member of the British government who was admittedly a great failure was being discussed by two of his colleagues.

"And now," concluded one, "they want to make him a peer."

"No," said the other, with greater scorn; "they want to make him disappear."

What They Said. "Did the girls say anything when they heard of my engagement?" she asked, with a little curiosity.

"Very little," was the reply of her dearest friend.

"But they said something?"

"Oh, yes; they said something."